

INDIGENOMICS

FIRST PEOPLES WORLDWIDE

Subsistence harvest-sharing network in an Inupiat village

Cash-sharing network in an Inupiat village

In Indigenous world views, we are all related as individuals, as part of a kinship-based community and as part of nature in balance with

Loiborkineji Self-Help Group, Kenya

Nature is essential for survival

Foundation for Sustainable Development of Altai, Russia

Balance and harmony are not romantic notions, but millenia-old design fundamentals

Union of Association for Gorillas Conservation and Community Development, Rwanda

Prosperity is seen in nature, and resources are abundant because they're shared

Nyatike Interior Women's Group, Kenya

Protection and production go together to foster collaboration and environmental stewardship

Volunteers for Development Association, Uganda

Economic activities are performed through flexible, decentralized production networks

Indigenous Permaculture Project, EI
Salvador

Indigenous economies are interdependent, and promote responsible resource management, sustainability, and “enoughness”

Association of Women Weavers of Kelkanka, Peru

Indigenous territory spans 24% of the earth's land surface, but is home to 80% of its total biodiversity. This is not a coincidence.

First Peoples Worldwide funds Indigenous models and traditional practices that offer insights to creating an alternative economy that promotes balance with nature and communal harmony